For those unfamiliar with Wright's "_____ for Everyone" series, they are a series of commentaries on the New Testament books by Bishop Wright based on his extensive historical scholarship. He provides his own translation (based on his study of the source languages) which is a very engaging paraphrase. The text is divided up into chronological topic-based segments, followed by a 2-3 page sermonette/commentary based on that section.Wright reveals that a unifying theme of vocation runs through the Gospel of Luke: God meeting people in their lives and causing them to entrain in His service. From Zachariah, Elizabeth, Mary and Joseph, to the shepherds, the disciples, the sick, even the dead, all encounter their place in God's unfolding plan of redemption and the trajectory of their lives is forever transformed. Wright shows that the Gospel of Luke contains themes reminiscent of the Exodus: Mary, Joseph and Jesus coming out of Egypt, and Jesus' unfolding vocation as Savior echoing the themes of Israel's exodus from Egypt. The 12-year old Jesus, found in the temple after a 3-day search, is thematically linked to the risen Savior, found by the empty tomb after another 3-day absence. The road to Emmaus is a journey where Jesus explains the Old Testament plan to a pair (Wright suggests that it was Cleopas and his wife), linking to the other pair in Eden, "eyes are opened" at a meal. Herod and Pilate's reconciliation during Jesus' trial and crucifixion is a prefiguration of the unfolding reconciliation brought about by Jesus' sacrifice. Luke's gospel also features the role and presence of women in Jesus' story.
